What is Fair Usage Policy?

Fair Usage Policy is a set of guidelines implemented by the country's local carrier (Internet Service Provider, ISP) to limit the amount of data consumed by the end user. Once the estimated data cap is reached by the end user, the internet speed will throttle to a slower speed (still accessible to the internet). This is to prevent data abuse and violation of data service agreement, such as bandwidth hogging. The carrier reserves the right, without notice or limitation, to deny or terminate, modify, disconnect or suspend the service if the end user engages in unfair usage, in excessive or abusive usage on the ISP, at their sole discretion, determines that action is necessary to protect the network from harm or degradation. Changi Recommends is not liable if the connection service slows down when end user has reached the given data limit for selected countries.
